Further details

After a few spells of heavy rain on preceding days, another band of rain is expected to push east across Wales and much of western England through Friday, this becoming slow-moving, before clearing on Saturday. Whilst many places will see a spell of heavy rain, high ground of southwest England and south Wales will likely see the largest rainfall totals. Here, some 70-100 mm of rain is possible, with the highest ground of Dartmoor and the Brecon Beacons potentially seeing up to 150 mm.

As well as heavy rain, strong to gale force southerly winds will be an additional hazard.

✓ Medium likelihood of low impacts
